Hi Matt,

Fully supportive of running to ground any man-made sources of water.

Note that in the 1960s when SEW drilled for the Dromana tunnel (through Arthurs Seat), there were several cases of groundwater encountered in the weathered granite at levels much higher than our Site. Furthermore, two of the boreholes on the southwestern side of the mountain (DT 9 and DT10) struck groundwater at 20 to 25 m depth and both produced flows at the surface of the borehole. i.e. significant artesian pressure. These boreholes were drilled between Jetty Road and the Bay Views Golf course in similar geology and at elevations higher than our site (RL 70 to 85 m).

The SEW Map app shows where the trunk sewer runs. Yes, it's a distance from the site, but it does give good insights into the groundwater regime of Arthurs Seat.

Also, maybe there could be a hydrant ground-ball leak. I will take some tools with me tomorrow to have a look.

Hi Dane, here's the SE Water infrastructure map for Charlesworth. I'm meeting the owner of 3 Penny Lane tomorrow and will pop up to Charlesworth to have a look.
